THE "ARGUS" CARTOON.

The cartoon of John Mackay in the Argus, which reached here a few days ago, is a puzzler to everybody. No one would think of John Mackay as promoting such a picture of himself, and the question arises, Who paid for it? People do not get such pictures in the Argus for nothing.

The picture represents a sour married female tagged "Nevada," crowning John Mackay with a laurel wreath tagged "U. S. Senator." Uncle Sam (this figure also has to be tagged) is depicted slapping Mackay on the back.

You have to look a long time at Mackay's picture to reach any conclusion as to who it is, until you see the tag. It represents a fashionable looking dude with big, dreamy eyes and tight pants. The clothes on the female representing Nevada are not tight. The idea conveyed is that her underclothes have all fallen down around her ankles. Everyone who looks at the cartoon laughs outright. The general idea is that Jim Fair paid to have the picture circulated with the idea of making Mackay look ridiculous.

FAIR AND JENES COMPARED

The World's Washington correspondent says: "Fair is the most conspicuous failure of the rich men who have purchased in the Senate. He has absolutely no influence upon public affairs; and finds very little companions in the Senate. He has been absent from the Senate now for some time. His absence attracts as little attention as does his presence. I do not know of a single member of the Senate who is on intimate terms or has been on what might be called social terms with him. Jones, his colleague, is a much more attractive man. He is familiar with public subjects and much more companionable. He has a very wide acquaintance among public men, and is well thought of at the dinner tables of Washington. He is well read on financial questions."

Gage and Goodman.

It speaks volumes for the management of the Southern Pacific Company that without accident or complaint it handled the enormous passenger traffic during the Grand Army encampment. The discipline maintained by this great corporation, the careful attention bestowed upon every detail of a vast and complicated business result in the best character of service to the public. On the day of the great parade not less than eighty thousand people safely carried across the bay and returned to their homes. Our Eastern visitors were unstinted in their commendations of the management of the Pacific railroad lines and of the unfailing courtesy shown them by the employees. The generalship that achieves glory in the big wars make ambition virtue by successfully handling vast masses of men is not more arduous or skillful than that displayed by the executive head of the Southern Pacific Company. The Hon. Stephen A. Gage now occupies that responsible position. To him and his subordinates belongs the credit. General Passenger Agent Goodman was perhaps the hardest worked man in the service and yet he found time to march afoot with his comrades—Commercial Record.

A queer book has just been published in England. It is a volume of poems and is entitled "Low Down;—Wayside thoughts in Ballad and other Verse. By Two Tramps." It is printed in various sized type and on paper of every color of the rainbow, and is covered in brown paper, tied with plain string. The idea that the authors intended to convey is that in the course of their tramp they had set up and printed their "wayside thoughts" themselves on whatever paper came to hand.

The most contemptible piece of business that Major Garrard's Carson Democratic Dolly Varden boycotting league has so far engaged in is the assailing of the young lady teachers of the Capitol city. No town ever had a corps of school teachers of which it could with more justice be proud—True Kinsure.
